A Lift-the-Flap Fairy Tale

Cinderella's sisters
Were such a rotten pair,
She did all the housework,
They never did their share.

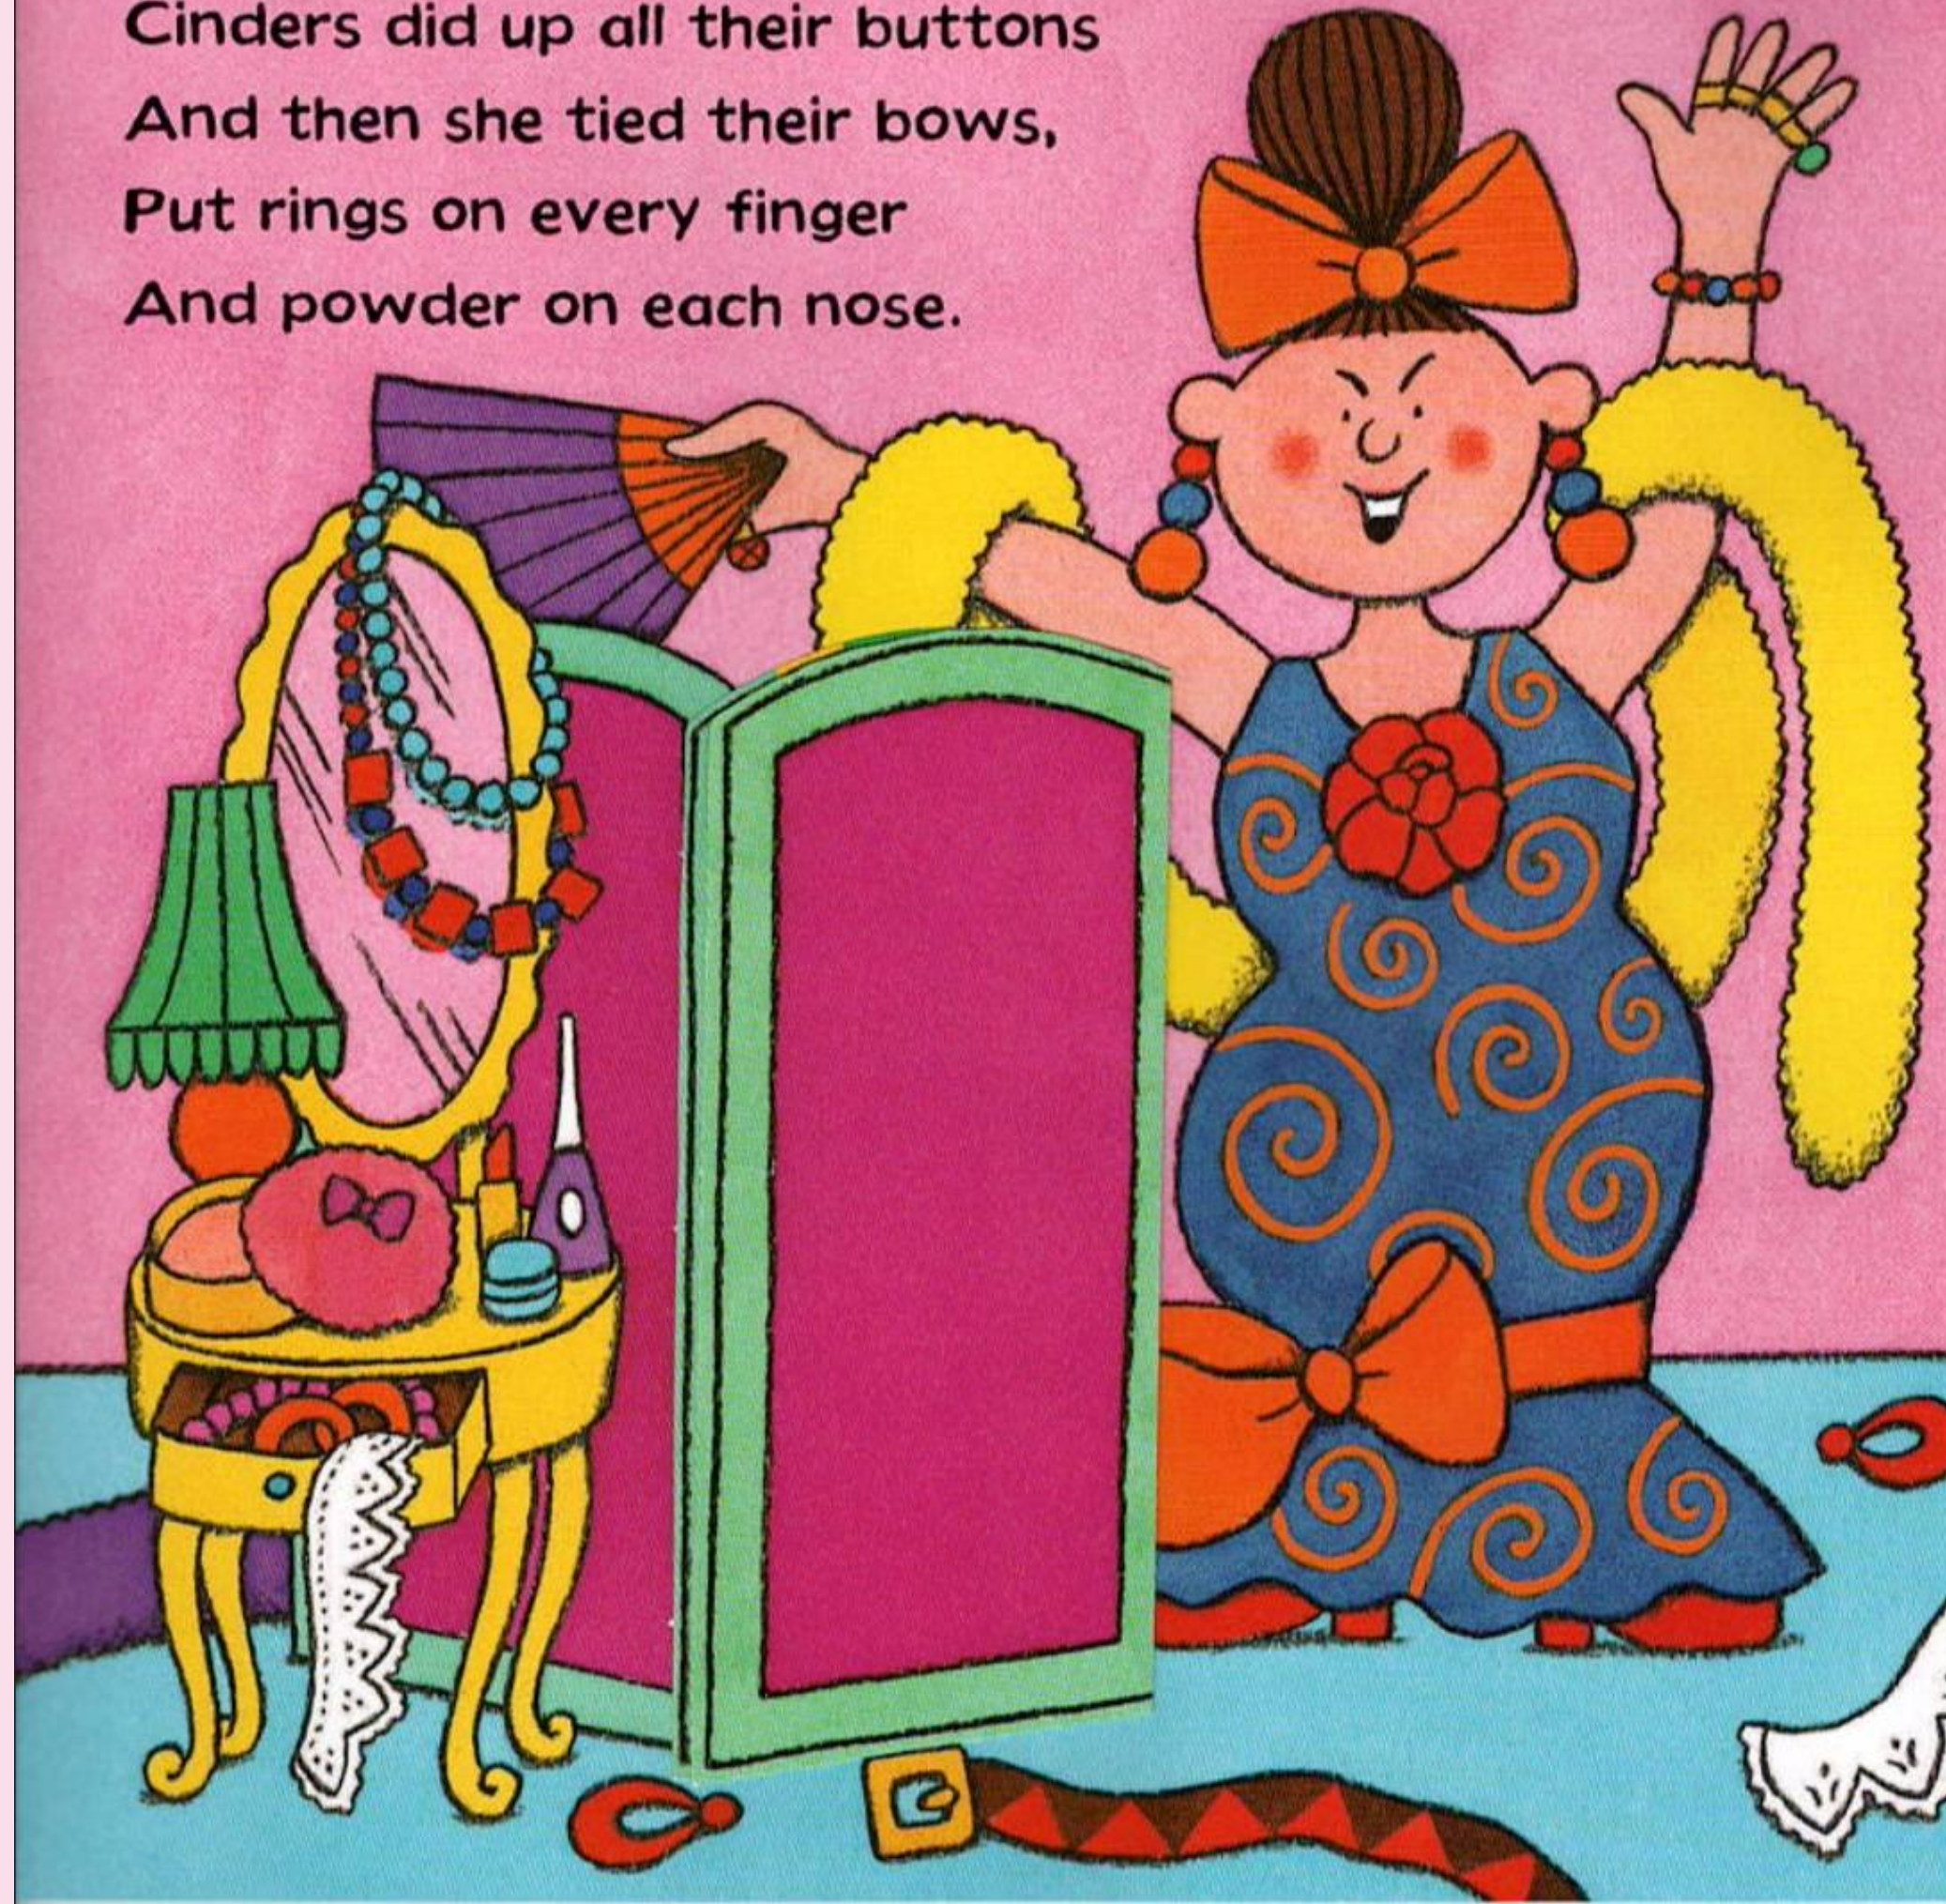

A party invitation
Came from the Prince one day.
Cinders said, "Can I come, too?"
Her sisters said, "No way!"

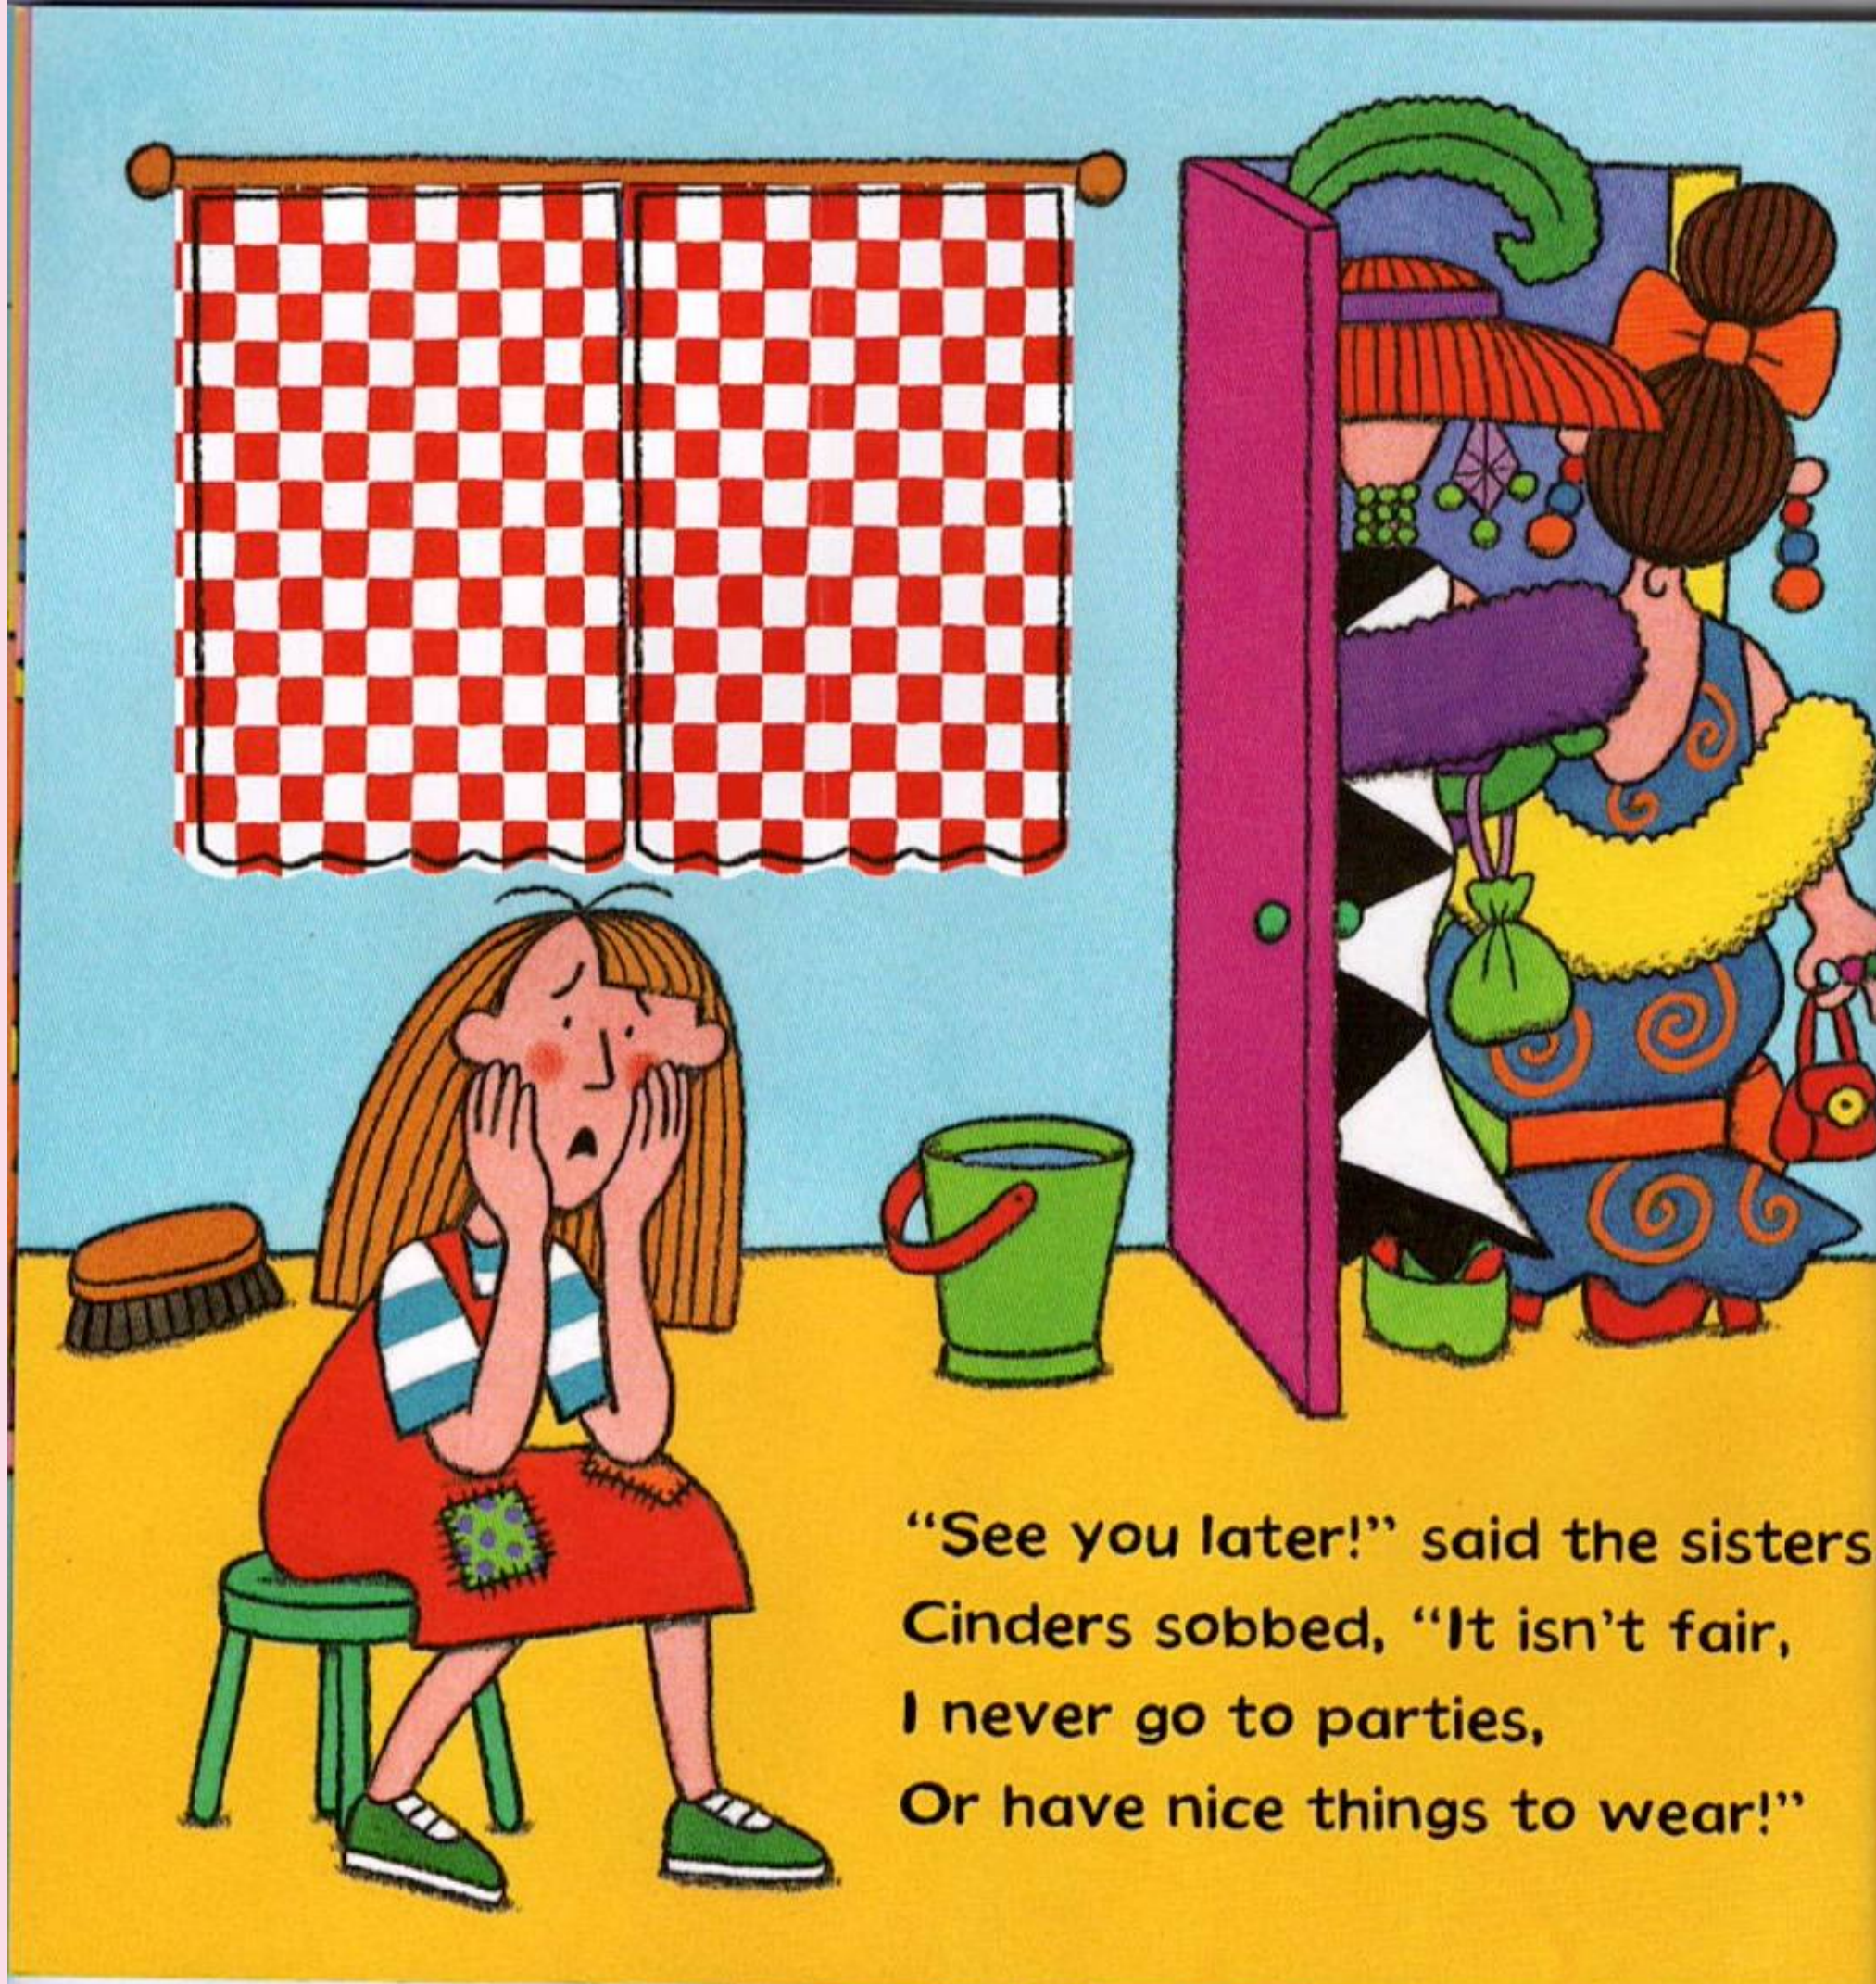

"You must help us to get ready,
And don't you pull that face!
Go and fetch our party frocks,
Our fans, our jewels, our lace."

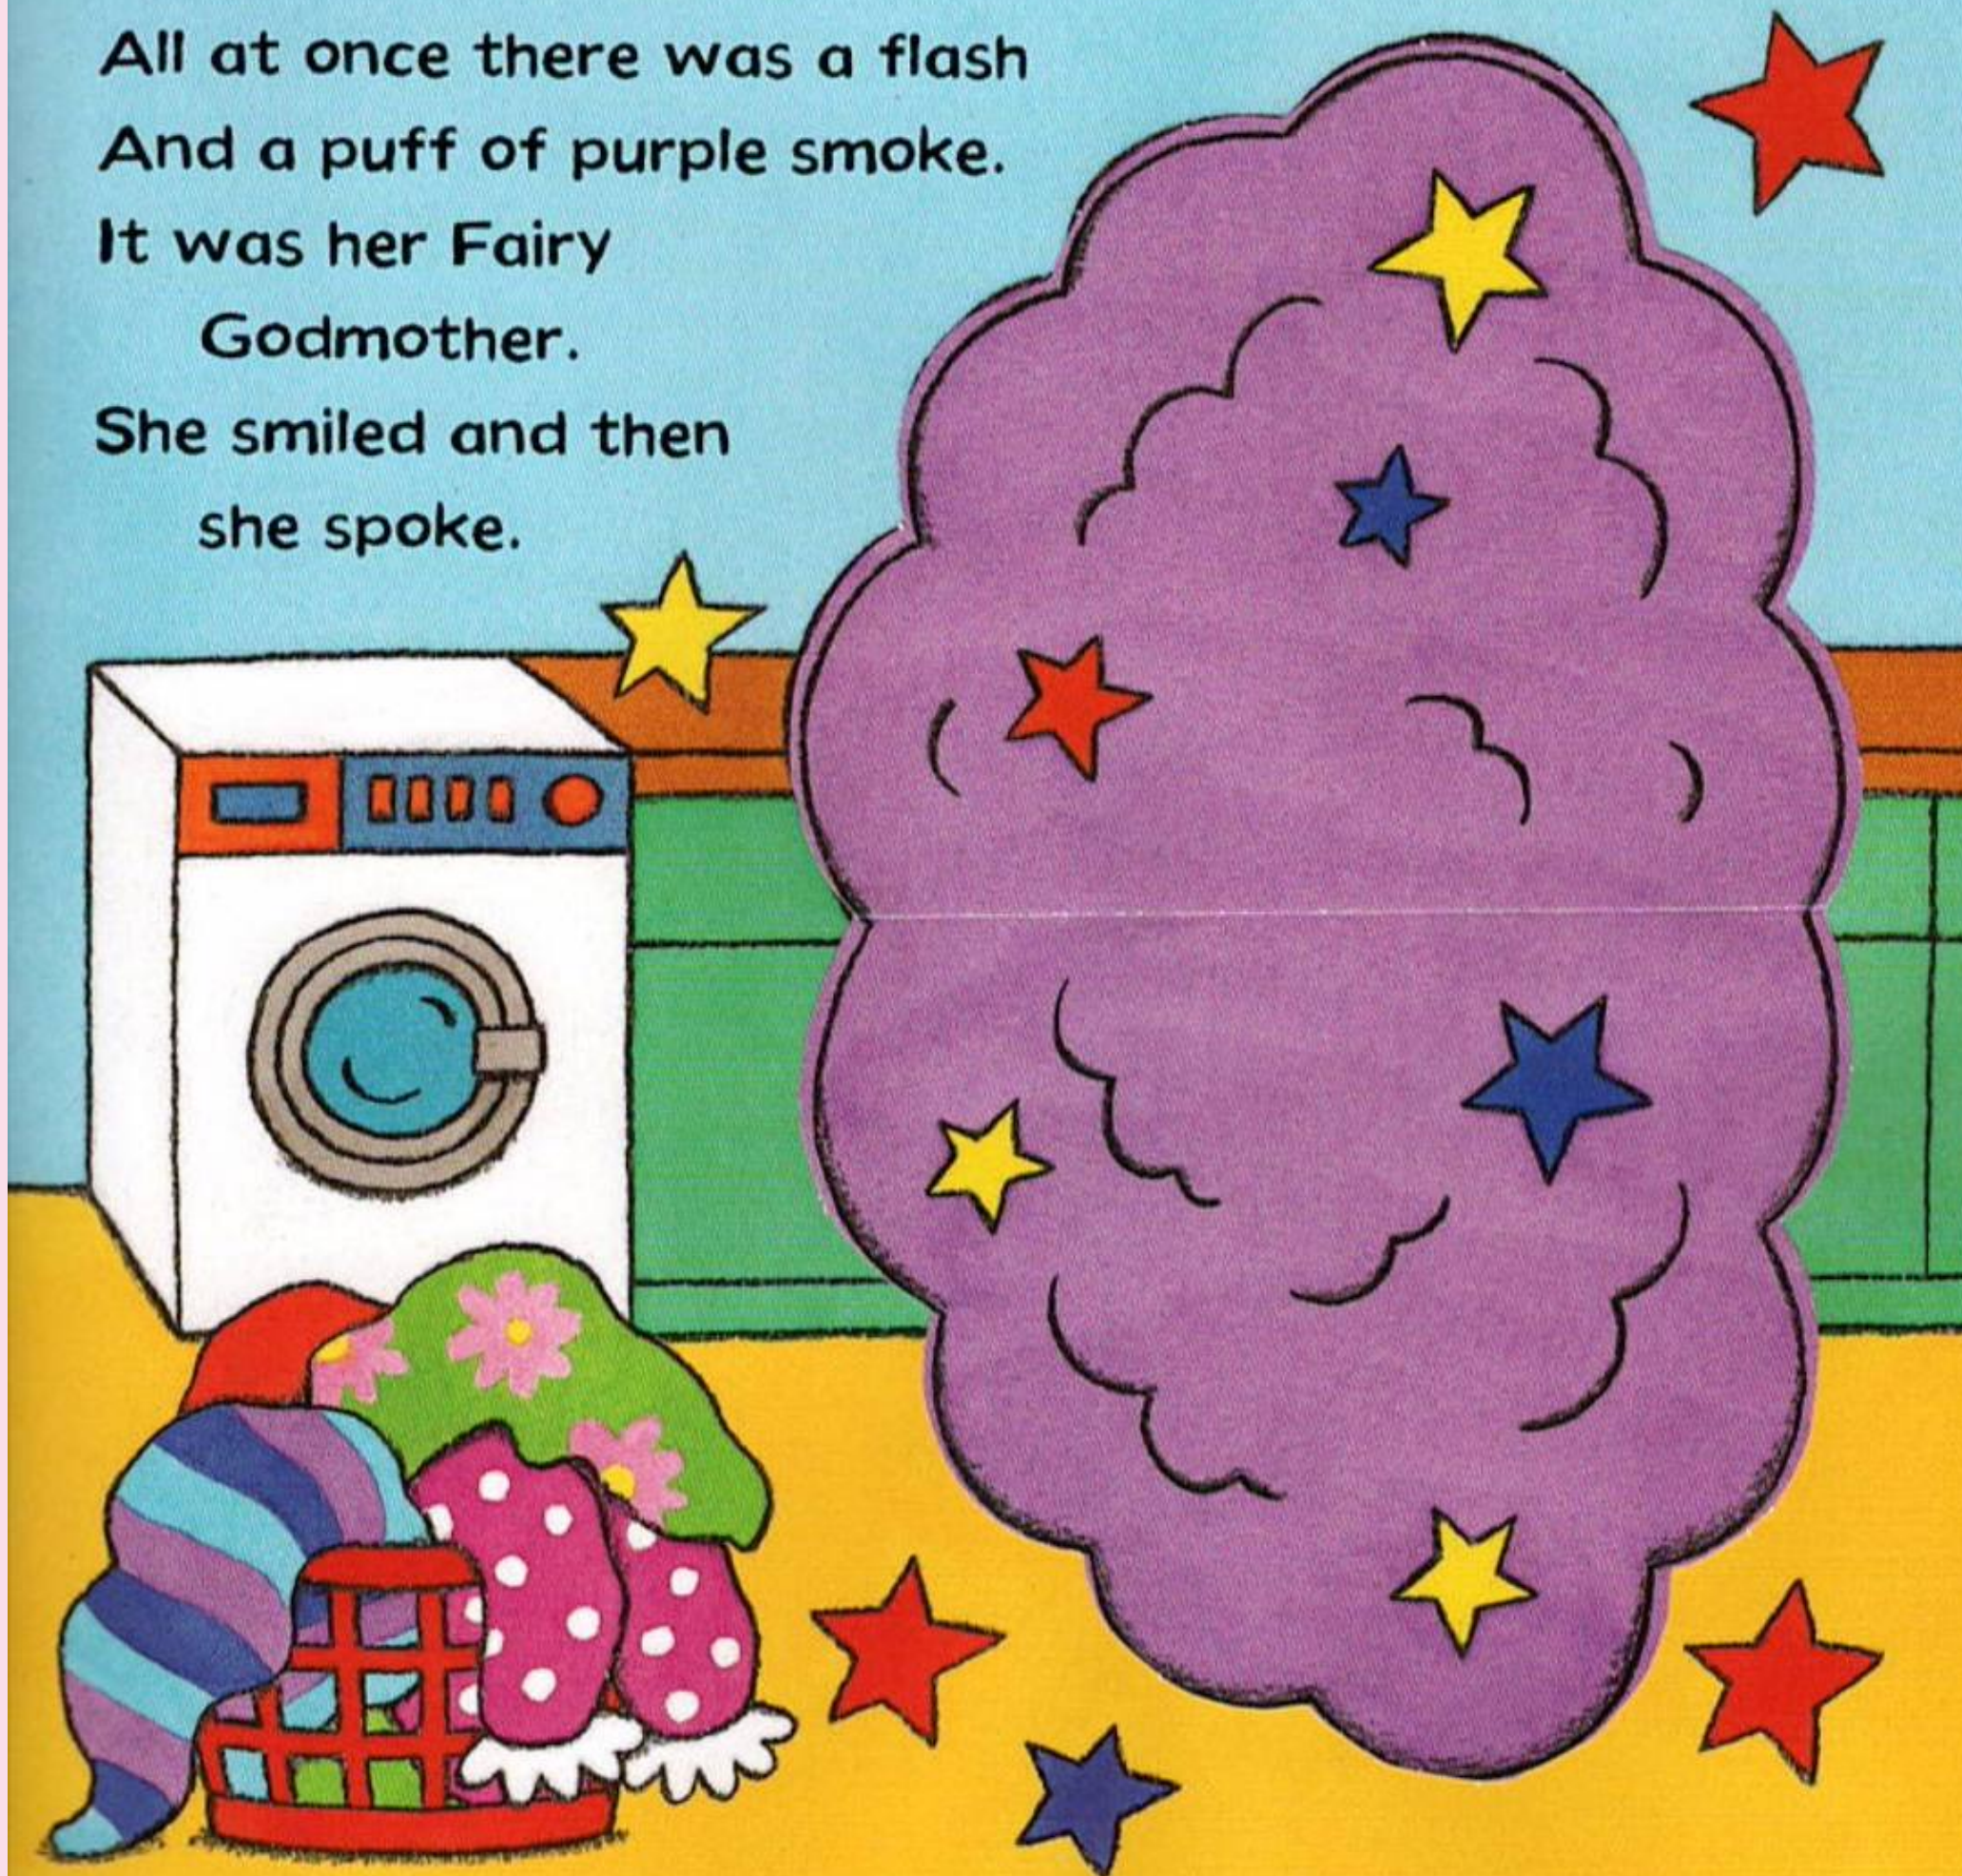

Cinders did up all their buttons
And then she tied their bows,
Put rings on every finger
And powder on each nose.

"See you later!" said the sisters.
Cinders sobbed, "It isn't fair,
I never go to parties,
Or have nice things to wear!"

All at once there was a flash
And a puff of purple smoke.
It was her Fairy
Godmother.
She smiled and then she spoke.

“Find me a pumpkin and a frog,
And two white mice as well.
Put them in the garden
And I will cast a spell.”

The Fairy waved her magic wand.
“Here’s a coach and a ballgown, too.
Have fun at the party, Cinders,
But there’s one thing you must do . . .

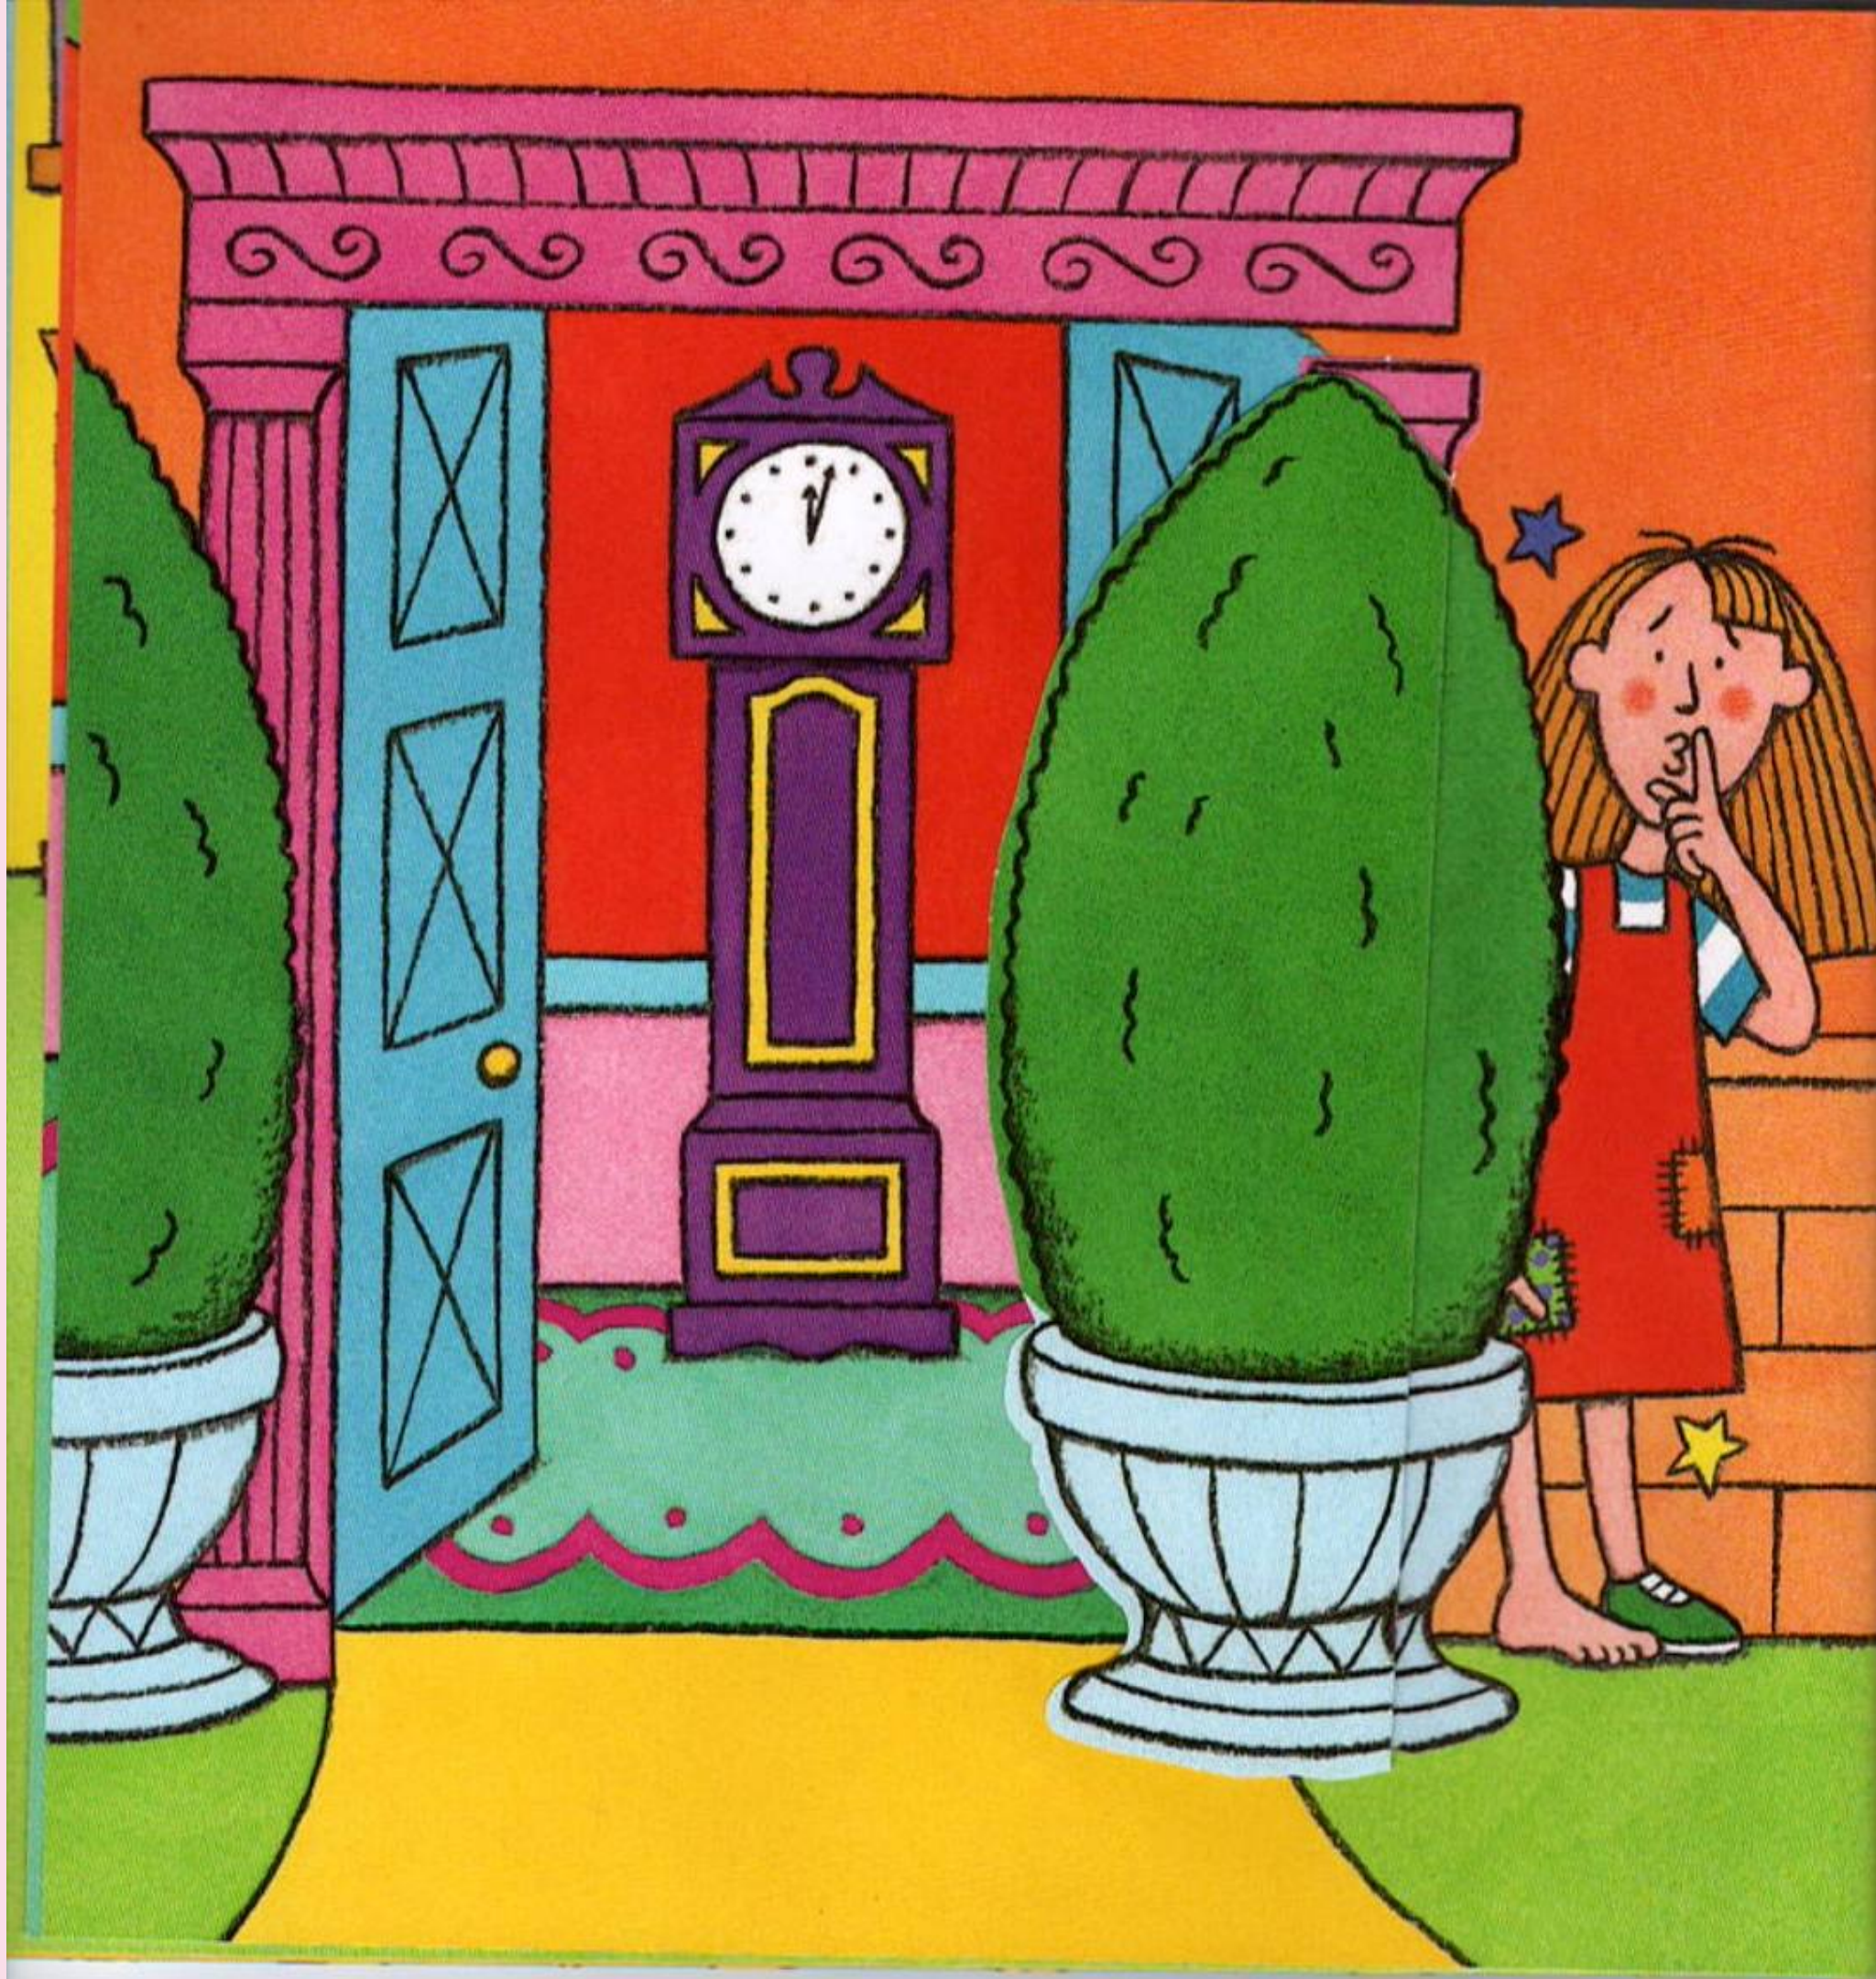

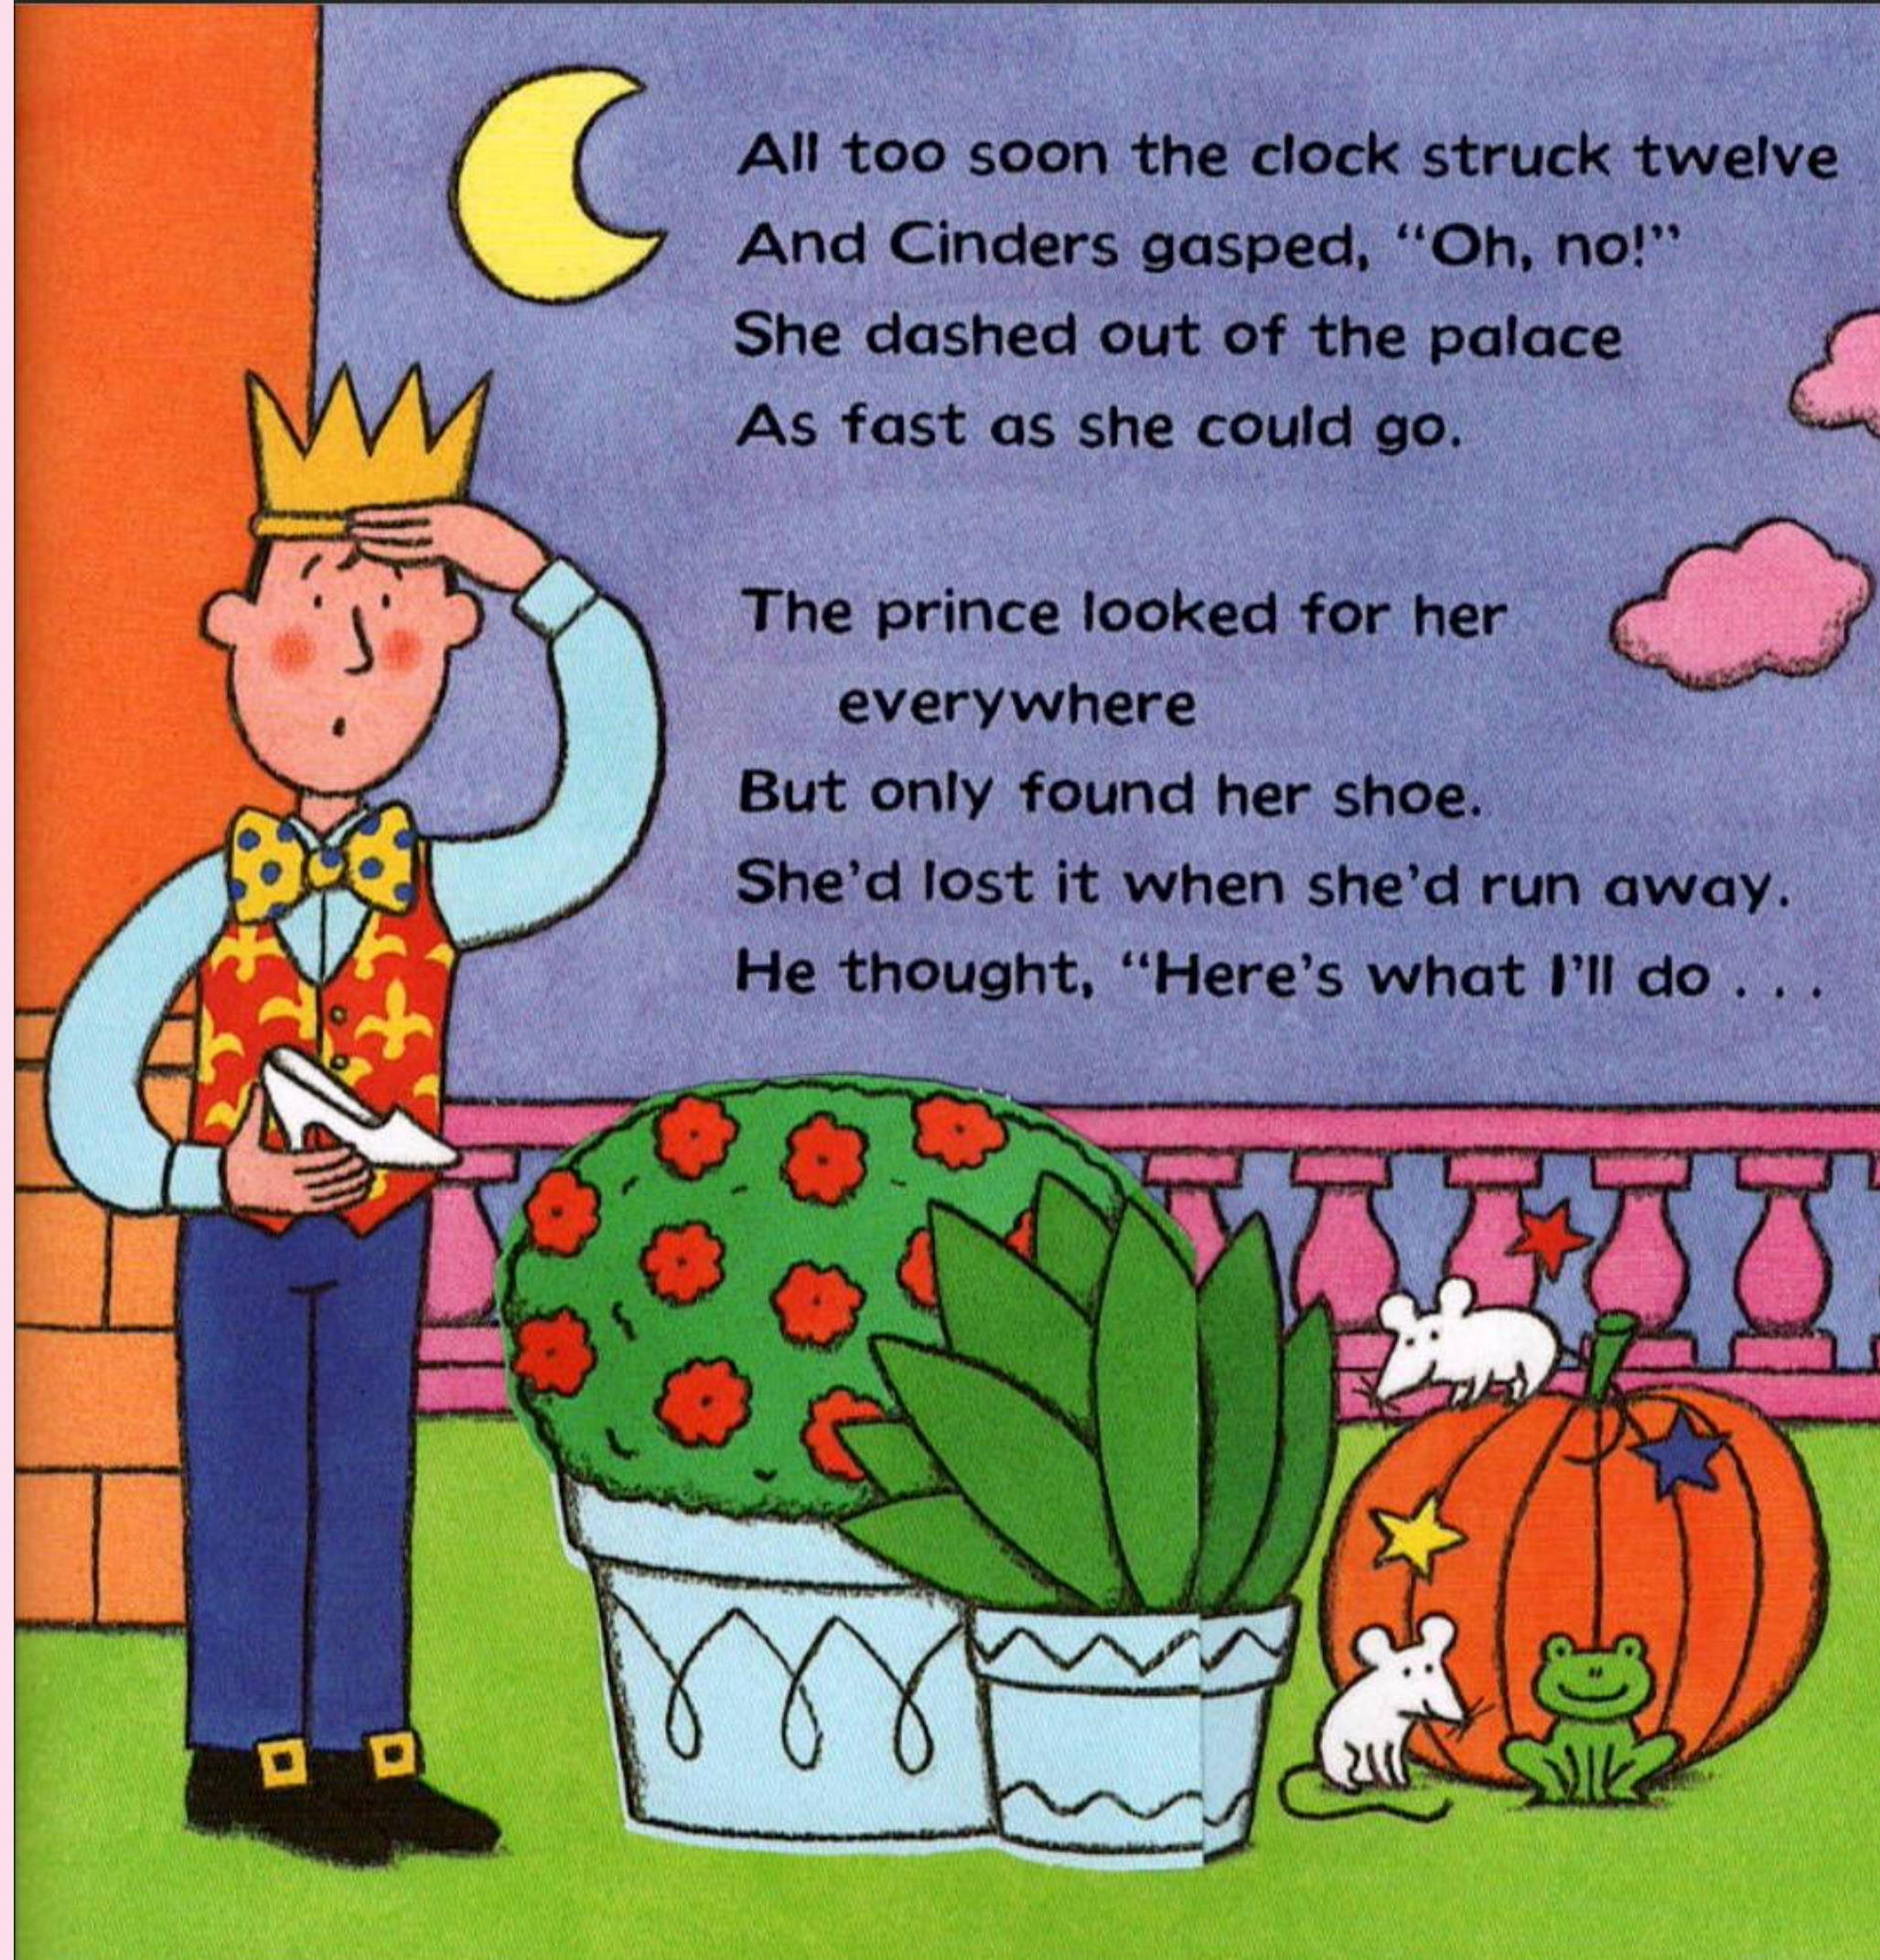

"You must be home
by twelve o'clock."
Cinders said, "Okay,"
And went off to the palace
To dance the night away.

She had a really brilliant time,
The Prince liked her the best.
Her sisters whispered, "Who's that girl?"
They never even guessed!

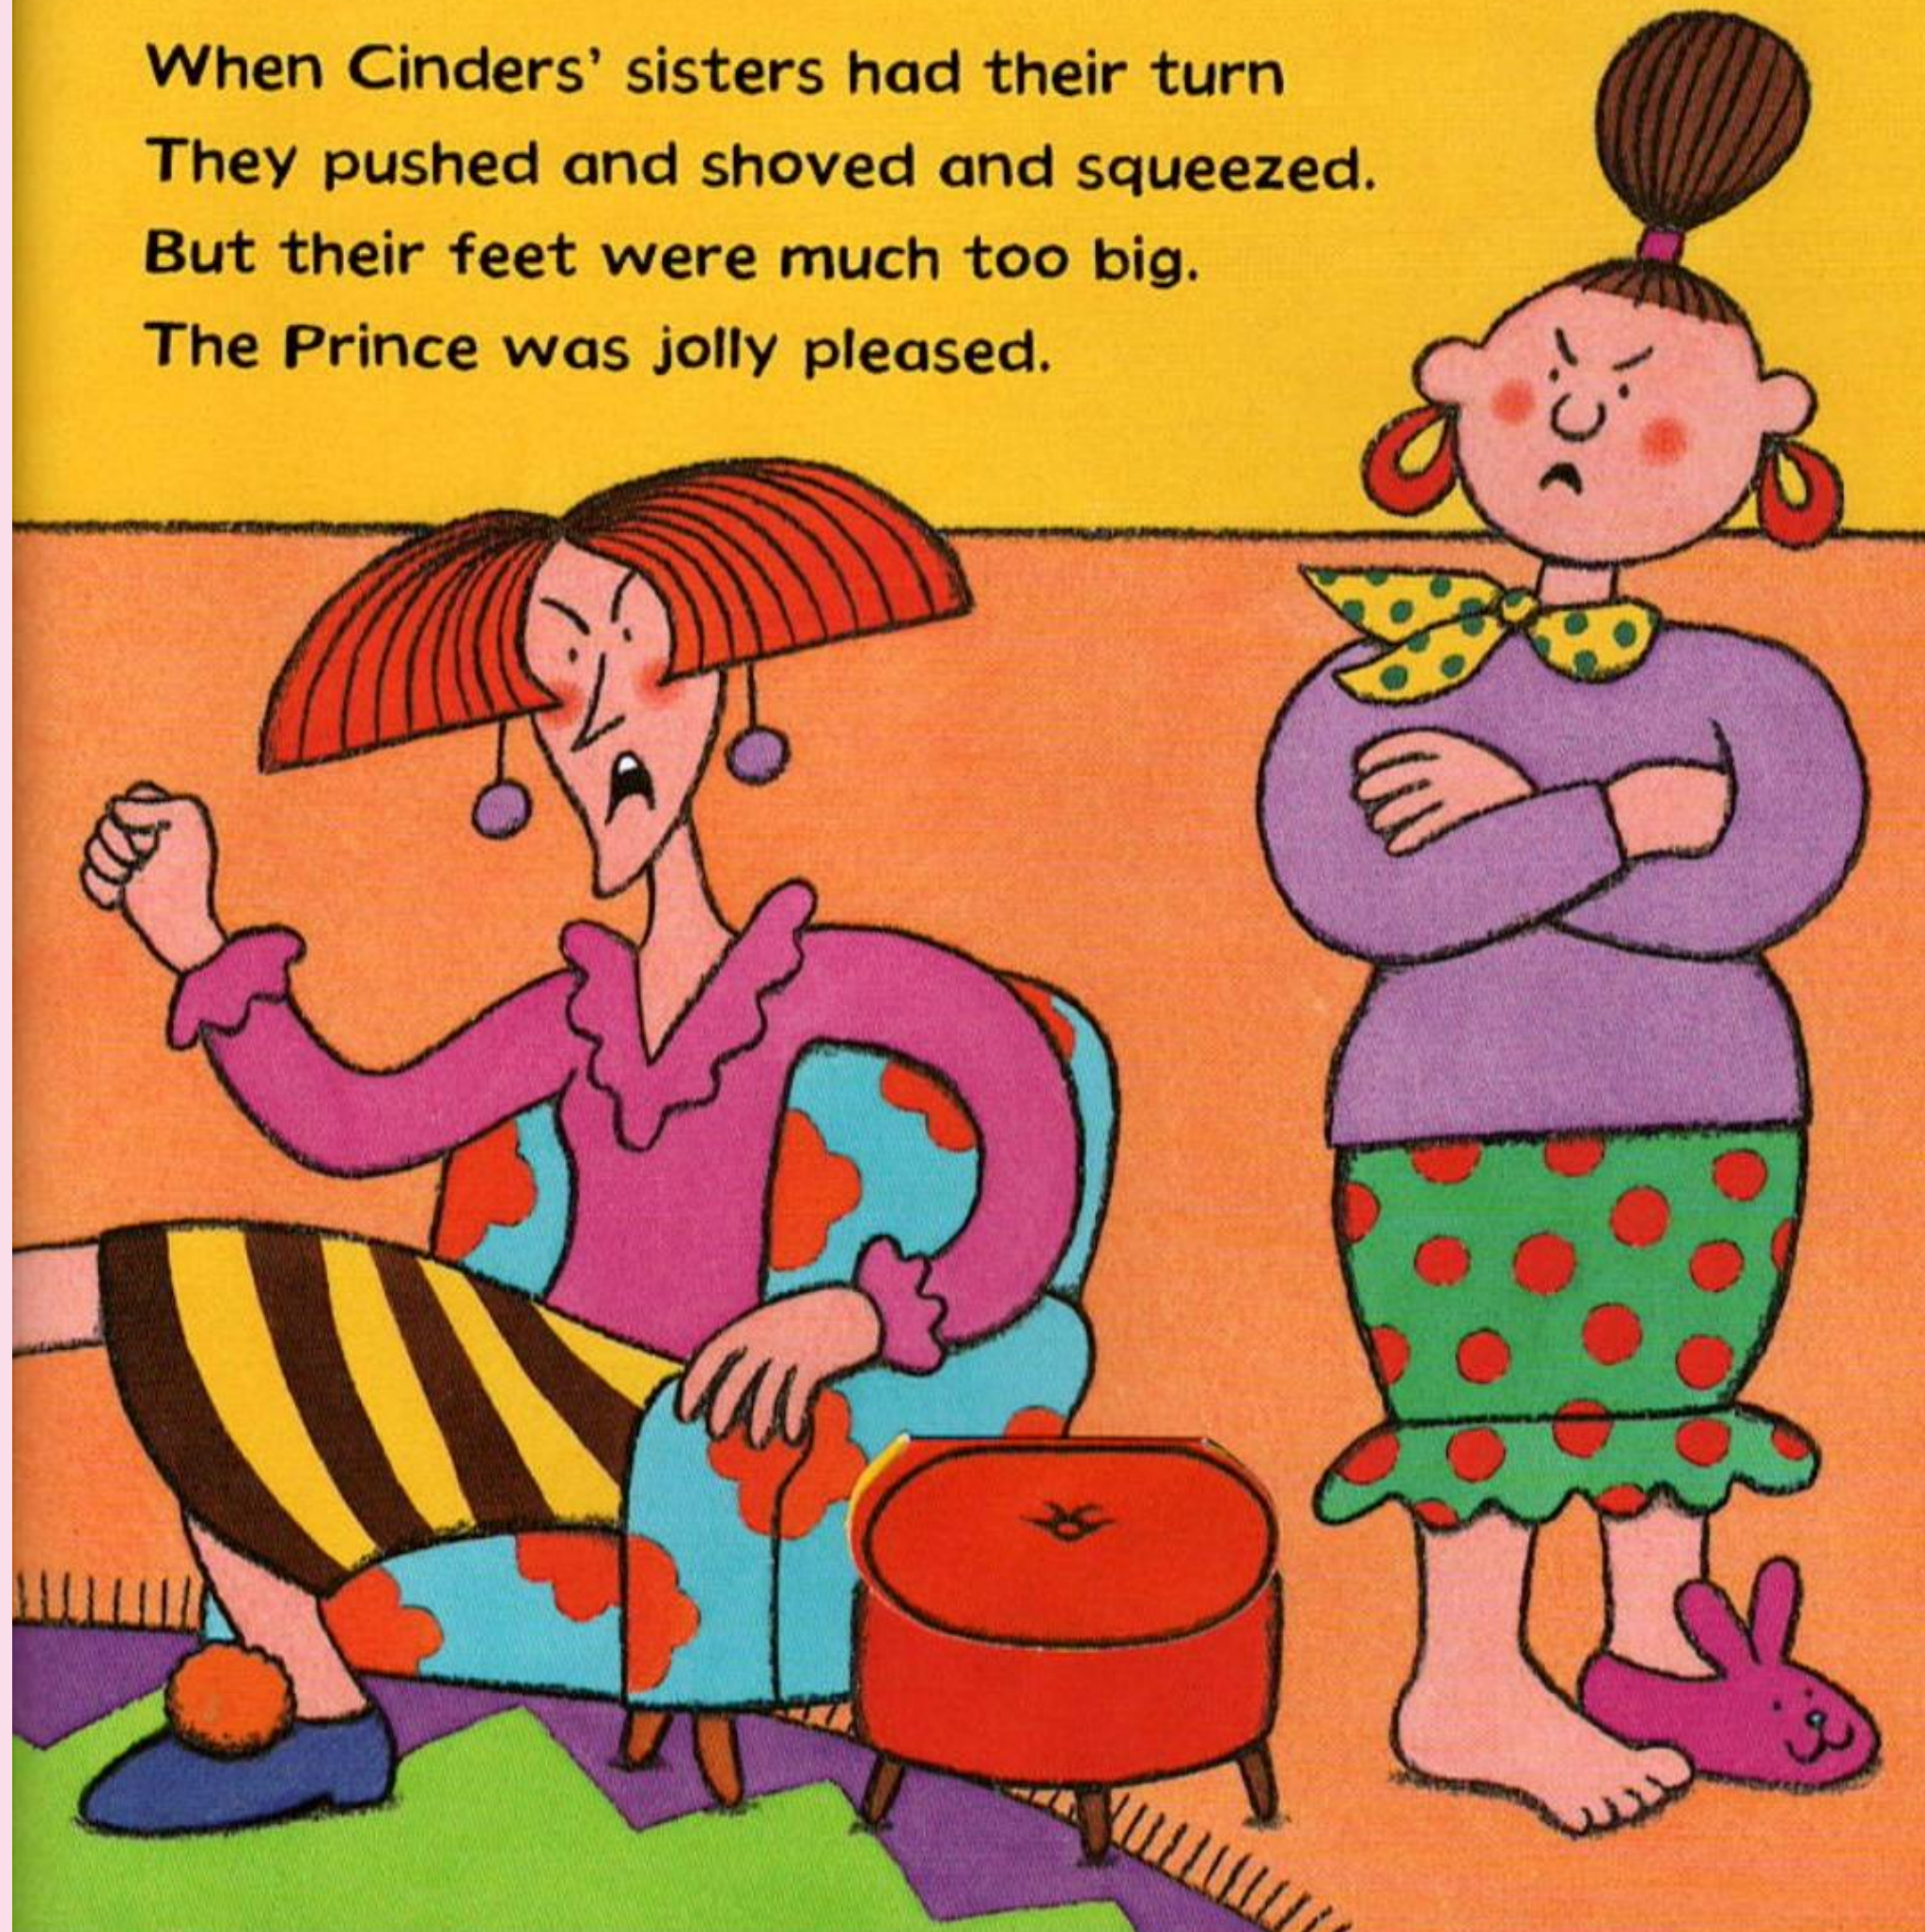

All too soon the clock struck twelve
And Cinders gasped, "Oh, no!"
She dashed out of the palace
As fast as she could go.

The prince looked for her everywhere
But only found her shoe.
She'd lost it when she'd run away.
He thought, "Here's what I'll do . . .

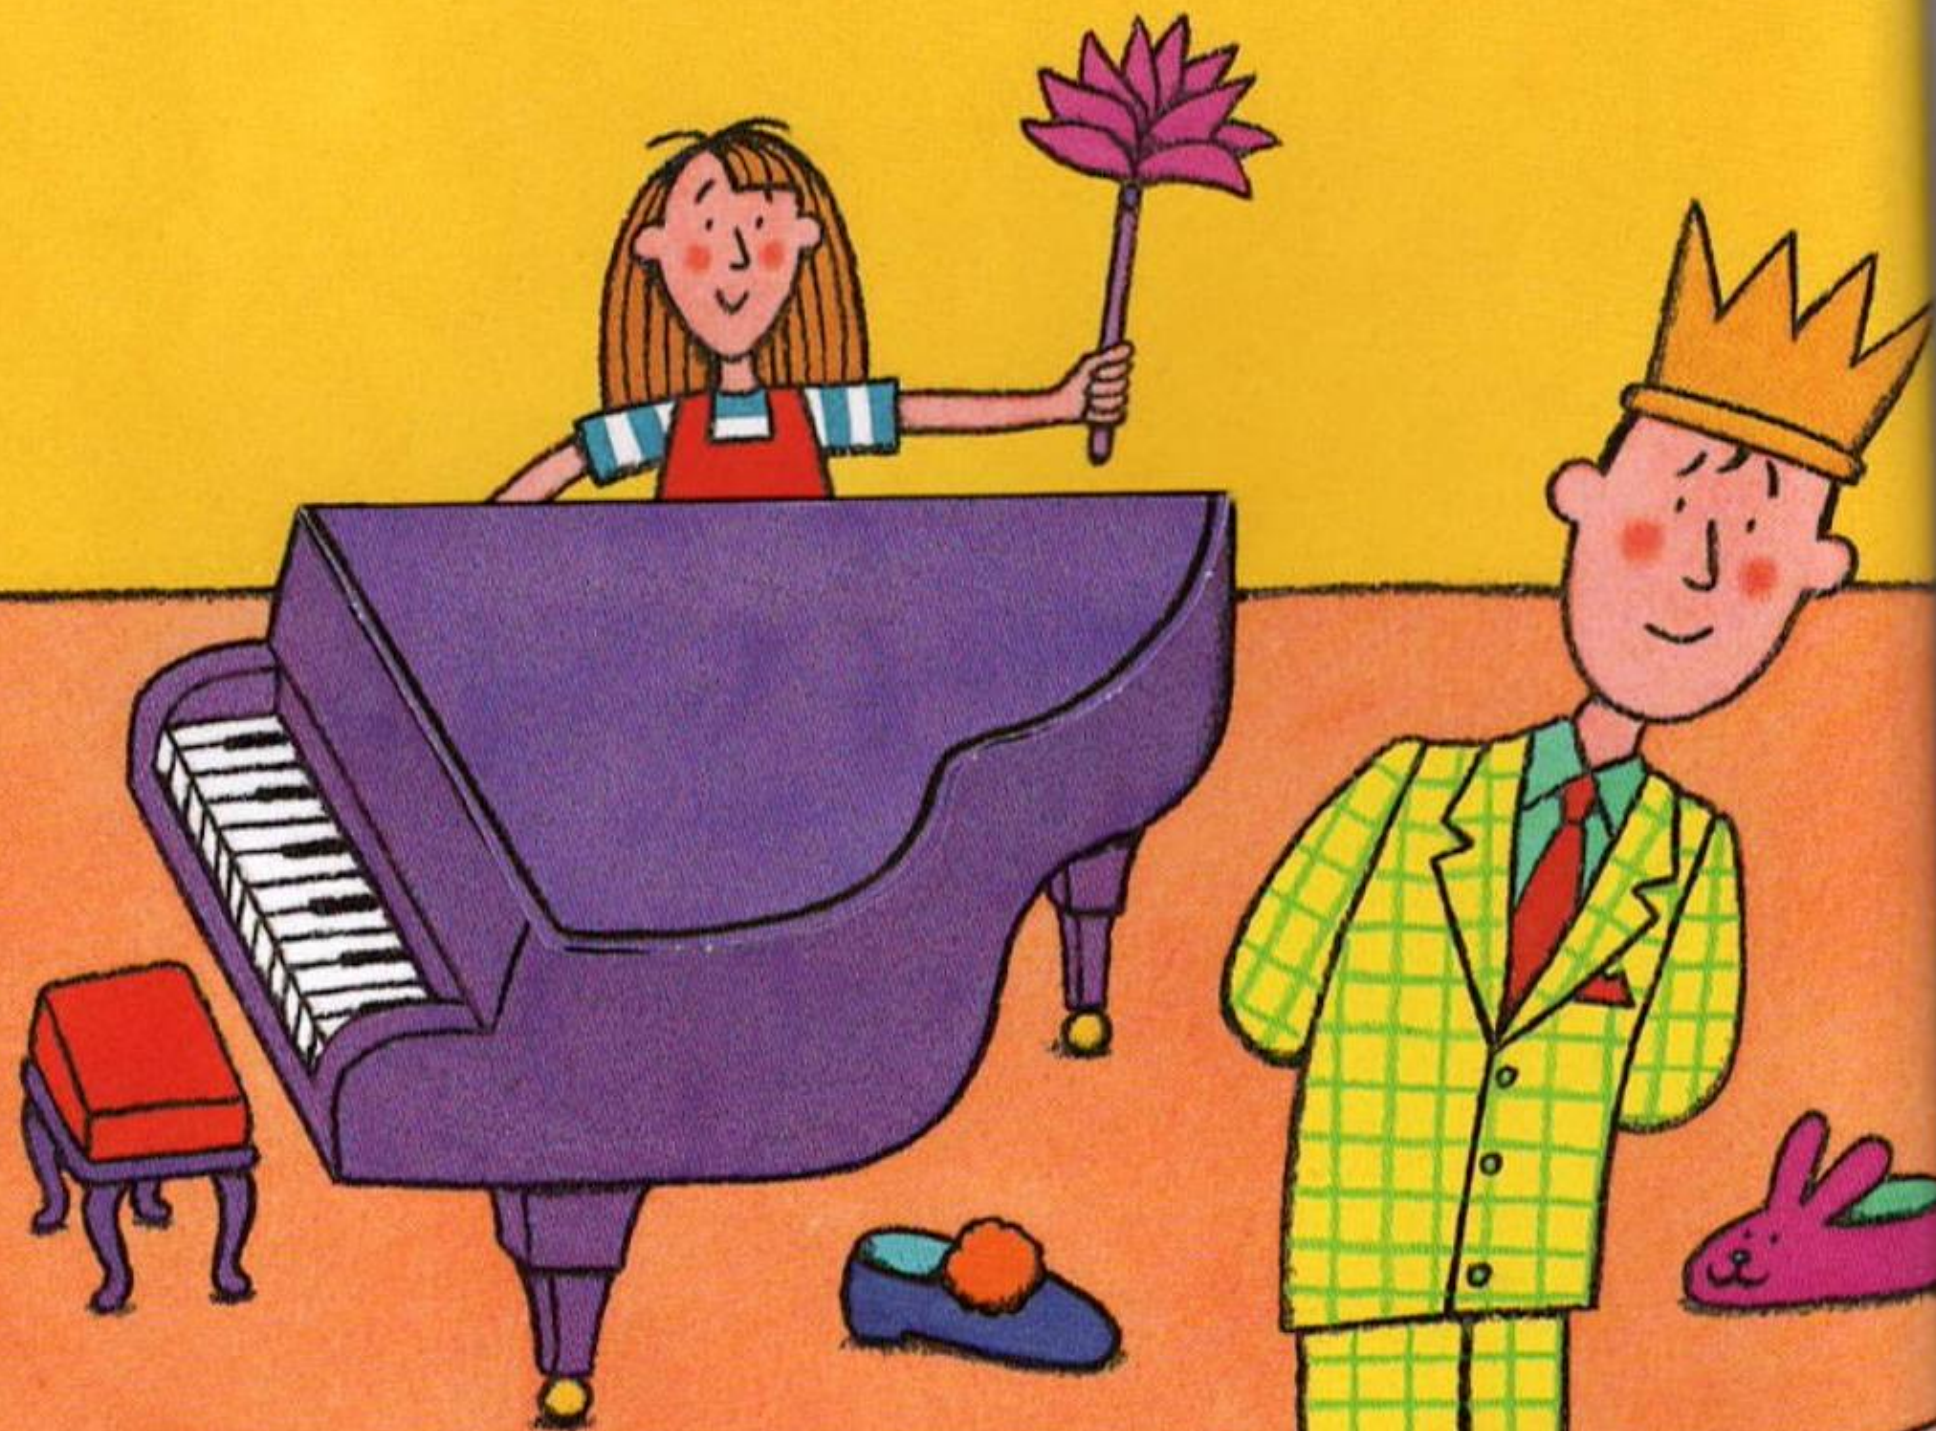

When Cinders' sisters had their turn
They pushed and shoved and squeezed.
But their feet were much too big.
The Prince was jolly pleased.

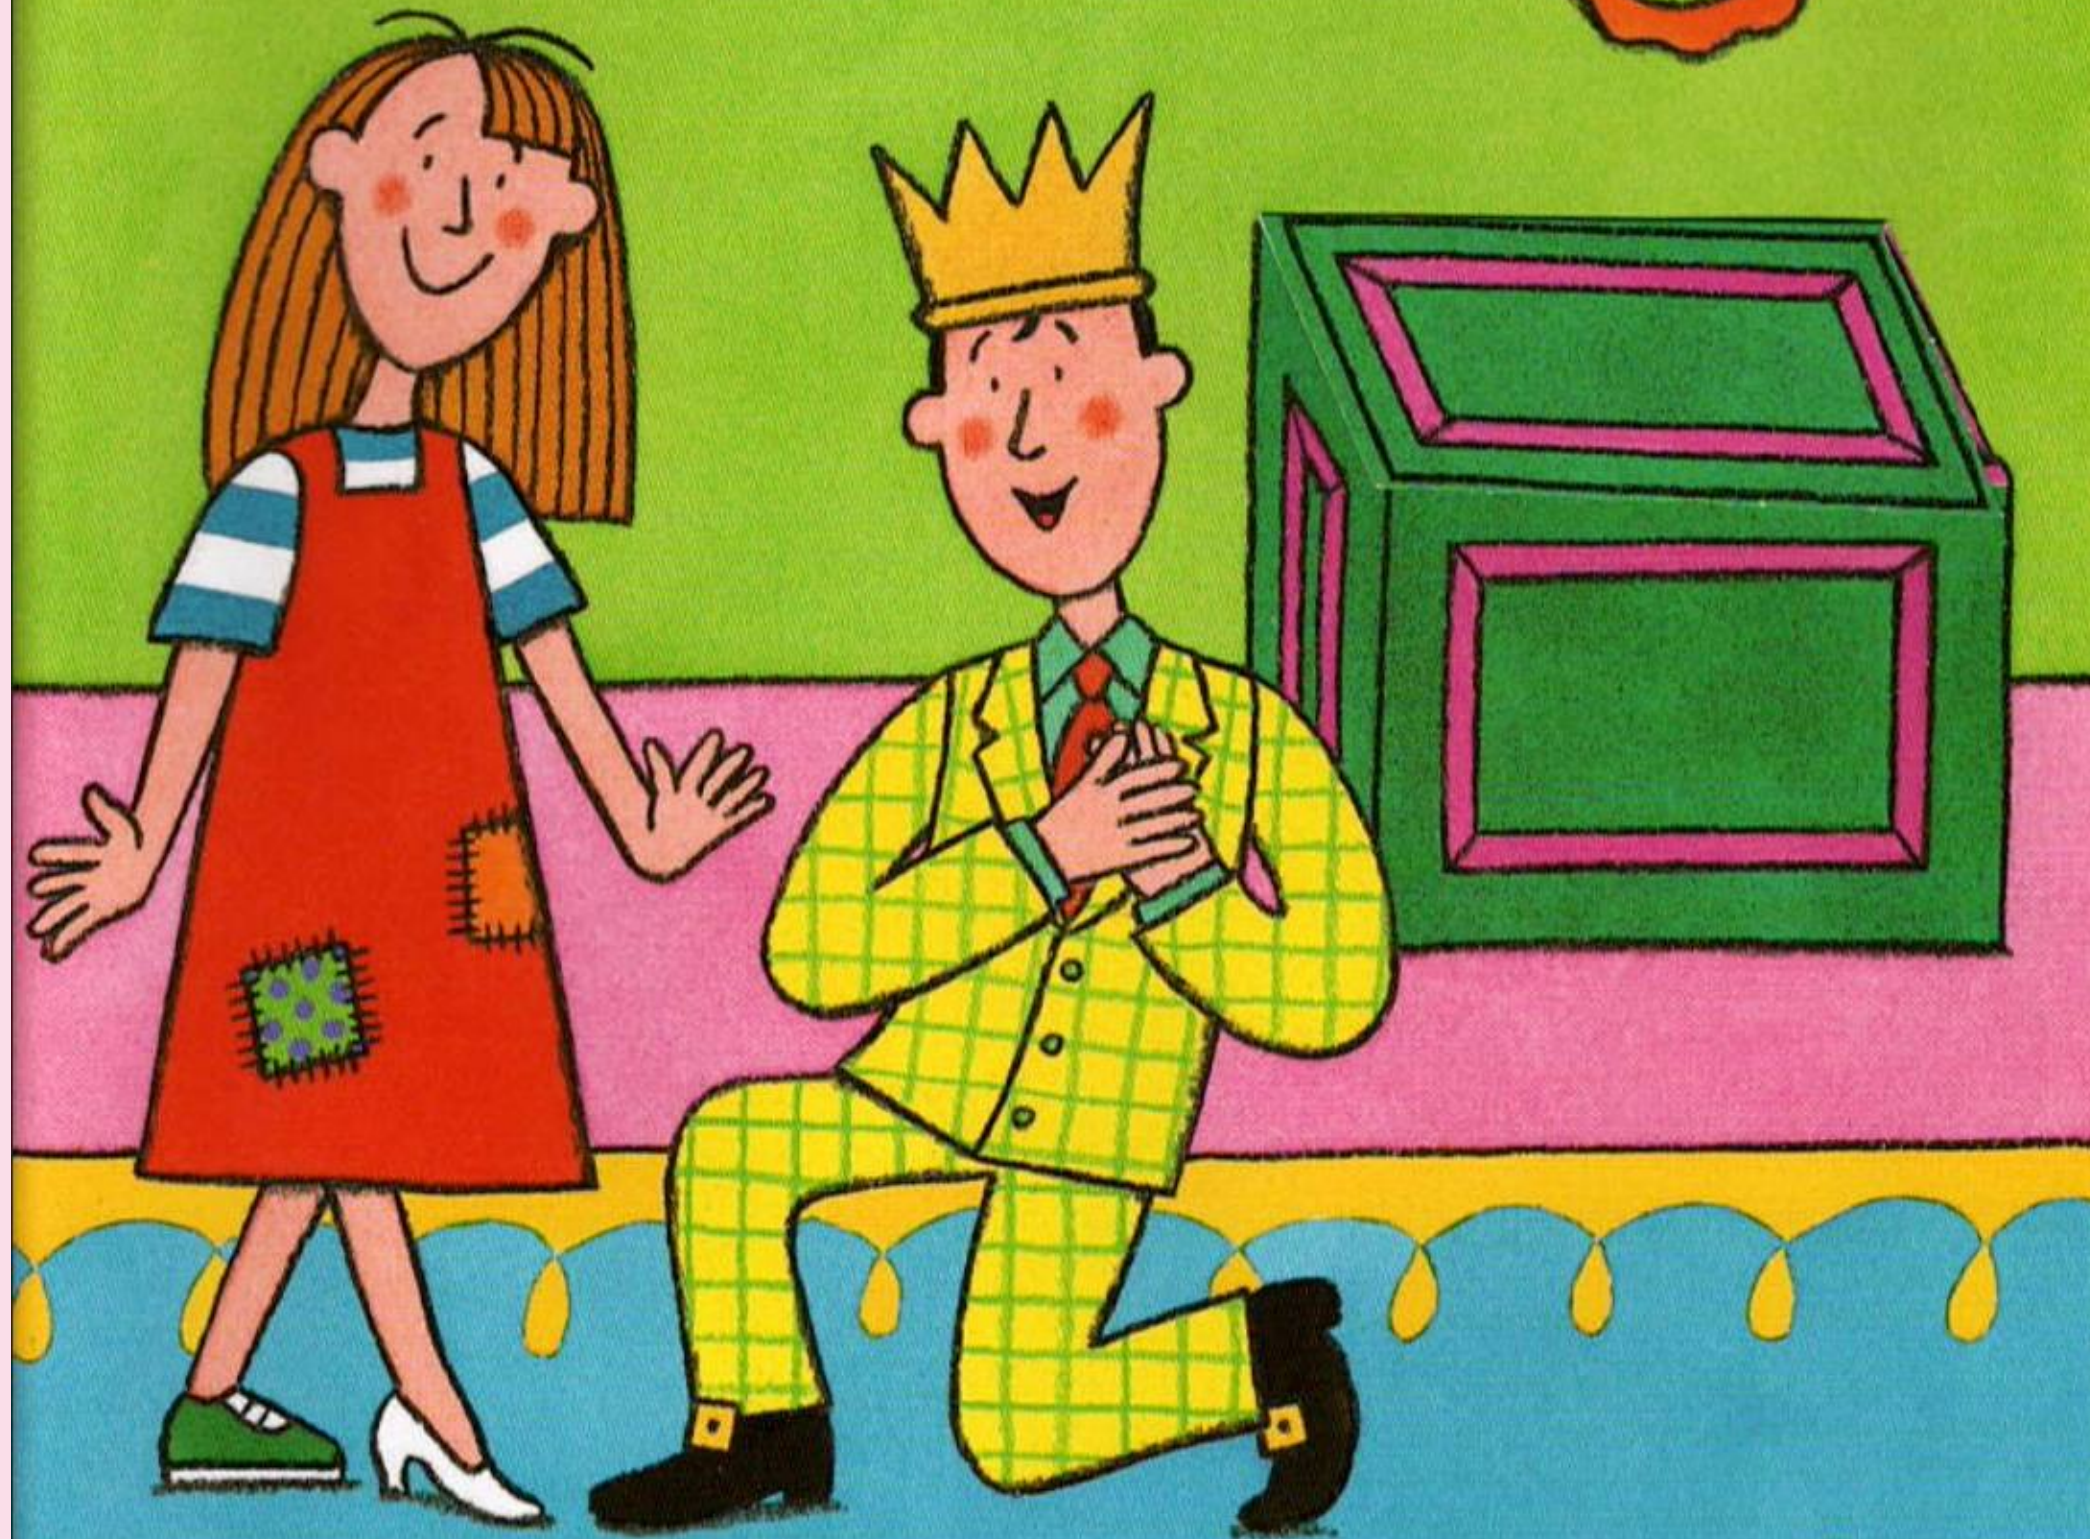

And he was just about to leave
When Cinderella appeared.
“May I try on the shoe?” she asked.
Her horrid sisters sneered.

"I'll make each girl in the kingdom
Try on this shoe, to see
If I can find the owner
'Cause she's the one for me!"

Imagine their astonishment.
They wailed, "It cannot be!"
The shoe fitted her perfectly.
The Prince cried, "Marry me!"

Happy Cinderella
Said to the prince, "I'm yours
But only if you promise me
We'll share the household chores!"

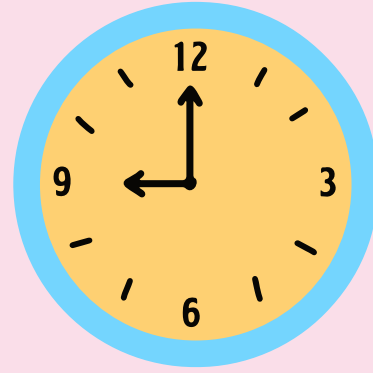

It was the wedding of the year.
Guests came from far and wide
And even Cinders' sisters said
She made a lovely bride!
